Wild Parsnip and Glass Block Window

Cleveland's Industrial Flats always provided enormous fascination for me, and it became a backdrop for many of my paintings. Recently, I found a new aspect ... so compelling that I have incorporated the subject into virtually all of my newest work. Early morning light illuminating a large glass block window in an abandoned warehouse made such an intense impression that I have been intrigued with the effect of glass block and light ever since.

The surfaces and volume of glass block read in a complex way, not only reflecting light but also distorting, absorbing, and transmitting it. The blocks create a kaleidoscopic progression of altering pattern as the eye moves from square to square. Unpredictable changes captivate the eye and stimulate the imagination, yet the blocks do not allow a clear understanding of the space on the other side. The interaction of light and glass blocks in my work is intended as an allegory for our limited vision of immortality.

The painted bricks of the warehouse which structurally and compositionally frame the window have seen many generations come and go ... each leaving its own signature on the building. The warehouse is in an advanced stage of deterioration, but it retains its noble character. I find expressive beauty in the color transitions that occur in the glass and the bricks.

In the context of my ongoing Urban Botany Series, I juxtapose the engineered (glass blocks) with the natural. From the rubble of the window sill a wild parsnip sprouts. I find the spiritual message of this indomitable survivor a fitting companion for the enigmatic glass blocks.

In my paintings I seek to express the energy of the elements that make up our common experience. My definition of energy is enhanced by the tension between the imprecise medium of transparent watercolor and my conscious design mode.

Queen Anne's Lace and English Telephone Booth is from my "Industrial Botany Series." Sunlight falling on the back wall of the abandoned English telephone booth created exciting diagonals of light. I chose the static, symmetrical viewpoint and the almost life-size scale to interpret the monumentality of the enclosure, monumental even though the windows had been violated and the innards removed. The diagonals of the Queen Anne's Lace counter the sun-pattern, and a nature-created/man-created ^{energy} relationship is established. Conclusions may be drawn by the viewer. ^

Painting is my opportunity to record in watercolor the beauty we encounter in our day-to-day living. I consistently draw my subjects from man-altered environments. Images may come from an area as disturbed as a central-city parking lot or one as serene as a botany conservatory, but human action has affected every subject I paint.

In all of my paintings I interpret common visual experiences. Though the subjects are ordinary, through scale and design I can magnify their significance. In my compositional process I select images from a unique perspective, simplify and abstract them, and compress the components into an ambiguous plane. Abstract composition of mass and line, interpretation of color and value, and the use of one or more design motifs provide the viewer several levels for visual exploration and interaction.

The versatility of watercolor gives me complete latitude of artistic expression. The lyric qualities of the medium can portray sensitively the illusion of a reflection; and vigorous application of pigment can convey the dense mass of a locomotive. However, watercolor has a will of its own, and the conflict of directing the spontaneity of the medium into a structured composition establishes tension. I build on this tension, expanding the potential of watercolor to create paintings with greater and greater energy.
